In spite of the attention that has been given the historical Cyrano de Bergerae, it is somewhat difficult on account of the lifelikeness of M. Rostand's famous hero, to realize that he was a real personage. Cyrano's own mosterpiece is "A Veyage to the Moon," on which Rostand's famous hero, to realize that he was a real personage. Cyrano's own mosterpiece is "A Veyage to the Moon," on which Rostand drew largely for the third act of his play. It is a very portical, fanciful and imaginative narrative of a trip to the moon, describing the inhabitants of that planet and their strange customs, such as sleeping on heds of flowers, paying their score at the taverns with original poetry, and eating by inhaling odors through the pores of the body. Lord Orrery, in his "Life of Swift," credits this work with "dissecting the plan" of "Guillives Traveis." This is the first substantially complete translation ever published; the main idea of the original work—locating the Garden of Eden in the moon—having been suppressed as heretical probably by Cyrano's own friends; and Curtis Hidden Page, of Columbia University, has supplied notes and an introduction, while the book is illustrated with some quaint seventeenth century engravings.

Miss Wilkin's new novelette is called "The Jamesons," the deals with the advent of a New Woman, Mrs. H. Boardman Jameson, into a quiet New England town. This worthy lady starts in to impro" et he minds and "widen the spheres" of the inhabitants of Linnytlie, introducing them to Browning libsen and Macterlinck, to aesthetics and rational attire.

Mr. W. T. Snead, editor of the Eaglish Review of Reviews, has lately returned from a trip to all the capitals of Europe where he has talked with the important men of each country, from the Czar of Russia down. He has written a book with the "cathy" title of "The United States of Europe," in which he saums up the present political situation in the light of the Czar's Peace Receipt and forecasts the immediate future. He contrasts with great force inlie remarkable step on the part of Russia with America's change of policy and her acquisition of colonial possessions and military responsibilities. The views of the great statesmen of the Old World upon this subject are strikingly interesting, and the book is unusual in furnishing a complete and authoritative review of current international affairs, treating of America's task in the West Indies and Philippines, the 'Concert of Europe and its work in Grete and Candia, and many other similar pertinent matters.

The Doubleday & McClure Company

T

The Doubleday & McClure Company will publish in March a translation of "Memoirs of Sergeant Bourgogne, 1312-1513," which has run through many editions in Paris and which is compiled from the diary of a sergeant in Napoleon's Old Guard-practically unpublished until its appearance in a French historical magazine in 1896. It describes, from the standpoint of those unequaled private soldiers who 'grumbled but followed always," the terrible Russian campaign, the burning of Moscow and the memorable retreat—all with entirely straightforward simplicity that leaves an indelible impression on the mind. A list of fifteen or twenty "witnesses," prominent men living at the time the "Memoirs" were written, formally substantiates the author's accuracy. The volume is to be illustrated with reproductions of sketches made by an officer of the French army, during the retreat from Moscow.

The general secretary for himenas to the Central Council that the work of the Lengue be continued during the coming year on the same lines heretofore followed; that the Same lines heretofore followed; that the Chicago effice he kept open; that the monthly paper be continued, and that such documents be issued from time to time as may appear to be called for by the condition of politics and public discussion on the money question. If, after the orienting of the campaign of 1980, it shall appear that the platform of no important political party contains a demand for the abandonment of the gold standard or for the issue of any form of money worth less than its face value in gold, then the League can conclude that its work has been accomplished and can safely dishand. Such a happy consummation does not now look as probable as we might wish, but it is not impossible. If, on the other hand, one of the great parties adopts again the Chicago platform and enters upon a new effort to secure the abandonment of gold as standard money and the free and unlimited coinage of legal tender silver dollars, then the League will have a large work at hand, for which it has been making careful preparations ever since it was organized, three years are.

My Dear Sir—I have to acknowledge yours of the 16th, in which you kindly invite me to participate in the annual meeting of the National Sound Money League, to be held in New York, March 28th. My engagements are such that it will be impossible for me to be present on that occasion. I participate to some extent in the belief you express, that the free silver propaganda has lost its force. At the same time I think it will be wise for the sound money forces to held themselves in line to oppose any fresh attack of the kind which was so successfully resisted in the fall of 1896, Very truly yours,

[Wilmington (N, C.) Messenger.]

It would be impossible for any one to say which was the most absolutely cloquent serimen ever preached in North Carolina, or who was the greatest preacher yet produced by this State. The late Rev. Dr. Jeremiah Jeter, distinguished Baptist preacher and editor in Virginia in the past, held that after visiting Great Britian and having heard many of the more famous pulpit orators of our own land, that the two greatest preachers he had ever heard were Join Kerr (father of Judge Kerr), of North Carollina, and Andrew Broadus, of Virginia.
